(9A) Abstract (This has a maximum of 250 words. It contains 1-2 sentences of rationale, followed by objectives, brief methodology, major findings, and implications of impact of the study.)

Folklore as verbal art is defined as the knowledge of the people. This knowledge includes the old beliefs, customs, superstitions, and sayings of the people. This research aimed to explore and uncover the wealth of the verbal arts of the river folks in Capiz, Philippines. Specifically, the study aimed to (1) determine the literary aesthetics of verbal arts in terms of its denotation, connotation, diction, rhetorical devices, metrical devices, musical devices, tone, and structure; and (2) unearth the Filipino worldviews reflected in the narratives of the ballad. Results showed that the riverine community, particularly the riverfolks have the very rich verbal arts, such as the ballad. They compose these verbal arts from their memory which they learn from the past generations. The ballad as a form of fisherfolks' verbal arts is a vehicle to communicate and share their experiences, beliefs, and values which are unveiled through its aesthetics. Moreover, the ballad reflects the worldviews fisherfolks in the riverine community whereby their aspirations, philosophies and idealisms are reflect implicitly. Hence, these verbal arts shall be passed on to the next generations for it tells about their story and their identity. The education sector shall intensively document these verbal arts as vehicle of educating the young minds about the rich tradition not only in the riverine communities but also as Capiznon in general.

(9B) Keywords (Write 3-6 words you used in the study, preferably not found in the title because words in the title are already given keywords. This would also include process, or methodology employed.)

verbal arts, riverine community, ballads, literature, cultural identity

(10) Introduction (This includes the rationale, background of the study, and objectives which are not divided by subheadings. Incorporate at least three (3) reviews)

One of the many roles that a teacher is to embrace and teach to the students all that is desirable and beautiful in our heritage. These include the culture and traditions and their implications for the present world. In doing so, teachers become the vehicles for transferring the rich cultural practices to the students who will be aware and appreciate of the uniqueness of our identity as a people. It is with hope also that they will take pride in the cultural legacy that our forebearers have bequeathed. Thus, studying cultural practices will make the students determine what they can make in the future.

Folklore as verbal art is defined as the knowledge of the people. This knowledge includes the old beliefs, customs, superstitions, and sayings of the people. Its genres include myths, epics, and legends. However, folksongs that may be in the form of a ballad are also classified under this tradition since this genre contains the beliefs and customs that come from the knowledge of the people.

Folkloric traditions whether in a form of folksongs or ballad is an eminent literary traditions among the people of Capiz, Philippines. Literature understood as the art of the written language is non-existent among the people of Capiz, just like it is non-existent among the ethnolinguistic groups or communities in the Philippines. The Capiznon has rich verbal arts that are mostly preserved in oral tradition. However, exhaustive work still has to be done since there is little evidence shown in the documentation of these oral narratives or verbal arts in the province.

The province of Capiz with its main town Roxas City is dubbed the seafood capital of the Philippines because of its abundance of aquamarine products produced by the local fish farmers and growers. With this, it is notable that most of the Capiznon are engaged in fishing as their main source of livelihood. The province also takes pride in its river tourism industry which takes place in the riverine communities in Roxas City where mouth-watering seafood is served to the tourists may it be local or foreign.

Map of the Province of Capiz, Philippines

Among the Capiznon living in the riverine communities, the universally professed occasion where they perform their verbal arts on folksongs or ballads is during the entertainment of their visitors from other places. In this study, the local folksingers identified are members of the riverine communities who usually render their folksongs with their guests during river tourism activities in the province of Capiz, Philippines.

With the richness and beauty of the folksongs or ballads produced by the river folks, it is just proper to document and unveil their meaning to better understanding and appreciation both by the communities and academe sectors who are the vehicles of preserving and passing on this rich culture to the next generations.

Statement of the Problem

This paper aimed to explore and uncover the wealth of the verbal arts of the river folks in Capiz, Philippines. Specifically, the study aimed to (1) determine the literary aesthetics of verbal arts in terms of its denotation, connotation, diction, rhetorical devices, metrical devices, musical devices, tone, and structure; and (2) unearth the Filipino worldviews reflected in the narratives of the ballad.

(11) Materials and Methods or Methodology (This includes the materials, methods, duration & location of the study. Materials and Methods are headings used in Natural Science researches and methodology is Social Sciences. Presentation of materials may not necessarily be in separate heading but may be incorporated in the specific methods used. Justify paragraphs with main headings in caps.)

In this study, the researcher used a descriptive-qualitative design. The descriptive-qualitative research design is referred to in the literature by other labels including generic, general, basic, traditional, interpretive, and pragmatic. This method can be used to analyze elements, varied related literary approaches, and other perspectives including the aesthetics of satire, humor, sarcasm, and similar literary perspective which are related to social issues in the ballad (Dulock, 1993). Likewise, the critical analysis is made by employing the close reading approach, wherein the text speaks itself to the reader, and the latter understands its contexts based on the significations of his/her experiences (Biclar, 2016).

The material used in this study was the Isdaanon, a local folksong or ballad gathered by the researcher from the folksinger in the riverine communities where river tourism activities are provided.

Using the Isdaanon, as verbal art in the form of a ballad, the researcher provides valuable insight into its effectiveness as a tool in revealing the significance of its elements. It highlights the importance of using different literary devices to communicate social issues to different audiences. It also considers the reader-response criticism as an effective way to communicate social issues in the riverine community and that it can be used to create social change by raising awareness of social issues and by encouraging people to take action.

The analysis also highlights the philosophical approach in the ballad that reflects social status in the riverine community. It shows the power of the ballad as a political voice in society. The ballad also reflects the class struggle and the specific role of creating inequality in the riverine community.

(12) Results and Discussions (This part contains presentation of results (data) with reference to the table and figure, to be followed by discussion, with support of reviewed literature. Sequence shall be based on the objectives of the study. Tables are formatted without the vertical lines. Horizontal lines are set at the top and bottom portions as well as below table headings and above major subdivisions. Justify paragraphs with main headings in caps.)

Isdaanon Ballad and its genesis

Literature remains an elusive concept as it pertains to oral traditions. The Cadimahan riverine community in Roxas City Capiz, Philippines has many traditional forms of oral literature such as songs, legends, and personal narratives, however, there is also considerable variation in the way that these forms exist within the community and culture. This implies that the oral tradition in this community grows overtime.

Isdaanon is one of the verbal arts of the riverine community of Cadimahan, Roxas City, Capiz. It encompasses all forms of river communication through a ballad. The term isdaanon is derived from the Hiligaynon language isda as its root word which means “a fish”. The suffix -anon means “traits”. It is added to the word isda to form a single compound word isdaanon which becomes an adjective. Thus, isdaanon means “one that has the traits or characteristics of a fish”. Therefore, isdaanon may refer to a person or an object (when used as metaphor) who possesses the characteristics of a fish or any of the marine species.

Isdaanon is a form of oral narratives delivered artistically through a folksong or ballad. As a verbal art, it delivers a communication that uses music to convey a message. The message is usually about the culture, values of the community, and the views that they have with regard to society. It is also used to communicate through various presentations of different types of fish.

The informant from the riverine community explained that the isdaanon is usually performed during the river tour among tourists. It is the verbal arts of the river folks composed through his memory. One of the messages that can be conveyed through isdaanon is how metaphorical languages have been used between the types of fish and human traits. This ballad shows how human emotions and characteristics can be seen in marine species, and how we can learn from them. One example is when the informant talks about the Hiligaynon words “pugita” and “lokus” which both referred to octopus in or in English. The octopus is known for being very intelligent, witty, and capable of holding tight to a smaller fish it caught. This trait is possessed by all humans. The informant uses this to show how the octopus can use its intelligence to escape and protect itself from danger. This animal trait can positively be learned by anyone who listens from the ballad.

Other messages are the importance of taking care of the environment. This is because the river is the source of life for the community and it is also where they get their food. A river is also a place where the community can relax and enjoy the scenery. It is usually accompanied by music and singing. The music is usually provided by a singer. The Isdaanon can be performed by both men and women. It is usually performed by either a single or a group of people.

Aesthetics and Poetics of the Isadaanon Ballad

Aesthetics in literature is referred to the elements that make up a piece of literature. It defines the beauty and literariness of the piece that will lead to the unveiling of the literary substance and functions. Isdaanon, as the material used in this study, is too limited to be definitive concerning the aesthetics and/or poetics, but some features have appeared to regularly enough to be regarded as elements of isdaanon poetics. It is these regularities that this analysis describes, except for the notation of the music which the researcher has limitations.

A ballad in this literary study meant the modern use of words to signify a simple narrative poem whose mode of delivery is through singing (this is actually the original feature of the ancient ballad). Poetics, on the other hand, refers to the principles and factors which guided and shape the composition and delivery of the ballad. It consists of principles that appear to govern the verbal composition as indicated by their observable regularity in the textual composition, and the circumstantial factors which appear to contribute to the actualization of the poem as a performed art (Hornedo, 2006).

The isdaanon ballad tradition is a pre-literate culture and therefore is not conceived or composed as written verses in stanzaic form. It is the convenience of the present researcher that introduces the conventions of literacy so that both the orthography of recording and its punctuations and related factors are not regarded as part of the poetics of the isdaanon as an oral narrative. For the purpose of this analysis, the literary features considered such as denotation, connotation, diction, rhetorical devices, metrical devices, musical devices, tone, and structure.

Denotation

Denotation is the primary meaning of a word (e.g., the denotation of the word "rose" is a type of flower). Thus, the denotation of "fish" is a creature that lives in water and has gills. The informant used different types of fish as a representation of the denotation of the Hiligaynon word "isda" in which a word conveys its primary meaning while also communicating another thought.

The informant used the denotation of a word to communicate the theme of the ballad. The theme of the ballad uses metaphorical language to determine the traits and characteristics between the fish and humans.

One example of the informant using the denotation of a word to communicate the theme is when he uttered "Bagongon among Obispo, lukos ila maestro" (telescope snail is our bishop, octopus is their tutor. The Hiligaynon word "lokus" in this instance is denotative and refers to an "octopus" living in the sea. However, the informant is using this word to communicate a metaphorical meaning. The marine creature has various characteristics (e.g., fish is wise and cannot be tricked or fooled). This is a metaphor for humans. The informant is saying that humans should be wise and not be tricked or fooled.

Another example that he was using the denotation of a word to communicate the theme is through "pawikan" and "salmonete" when he sang the line "Si pawikan kag si salmonete indi magpaulihi". The Hiligaynon word "pawikan" in this instance is denotative referring to sea turtles and the Hiligaynon term "salmonete" refers to "striped red mullet", a fish that has a small head. Both pawikan and salmonete have distinct qualities such as being slow (for the turtle) and having a smaller brain (for the salmonete). However, the informant narrator is using these words to communicate a metaphorical language for humans. The informant used denotative words as a representation of the subjects whom he criticizes while singing the ballad.

Connotation

The connotation of a word is the emotional association that is typically connected with that word (e.g., the word "rose" might be love, appreciation, or admiration). The informant used figurative words generally on their connotative possibilities and metaphorical language classified as connotation.

The informant's use of figurative language creates images to present a more vivid picture for the listeners. For example in the lines:

I
...Sang tan-tanan nga isda, nagapuyo sa kadagatan
Ang ila opisyo parehas man sang tawo
 (All fishes lived in the sea,
 All that they do are the same as what humans do)

The audience can visualize the object of the singer's description and understand his point more clearly. The folksinger's use of the Hiligaynon word "parehas" (the same) creates a simile or a comparison between the fish and the human. In this way, the reader can see the similarities between the two, such as their physical traits and their behaviors. "Parehas" can also be translated to "alike" or "similar."

III
"...Pasayan ila maestro, hipon ila eskwela..."

The informant used different types of fish from the sea as a metaphor for the riverine community. The different species of fish represented the different roles of people in the community. The informant used the sea as a way to show how the community worked together.

The informant's use of Hiligaynon words throughout the ballad creates a sense of authenticity and helps the reader to feel the cultural settings and the traditions of the riverine communities. It also allows the reader to feel as if they are a part of the community and understand the culture, traditions better, and appreciate the beauty of the language, and metaphorically understand the Hiligaynon.

Diction

The diction is the choice of words. The ballad is written in a narrative form. It started with the Hiligaynon words using different types of fish to represent a specific role of people in the riverine community. The diction is straightforward, which makes the ballad easy to follow. The language is effective in communicating the message as it is relatable to the audience.

The ballad is also written simply and directly, which makes it easy to understand. The message is clear and concise, and there is no ambiguity.

The use of different types of fish which can be seen along the riverine community is evidenced in the ballad tradition as a normal characteristic of indigenous naming, especially in daily conversation and speech. This can be seen in the way that different animals are named in Isdaanon-verbal arts of the fisher folks. It is compared to some different types of fish (e.g., octopus, turtles, etc.). This shows how different types of fish can be used to represent different things in the ballad tradition.

Rhetorical Devices

The rhetorical devices in the ballad are how the words are used to achieve the desired effect. It uses many rhetorical devices, including anaphora, personification, and metaphors.

The informant used the simile word "Parang" (Like) in this ballad to compare the fish characteristics to human traits. The informant is emphasizing how important the story is and how it can give life. It is used to make a description more emphatic or vivid.

I
Dili naton usuyon istorya sang isdaanon
Senyores pamatii ninyo,ining panalambiton
Sang tanan tanan nga isda, nagapuyo sa kadagatan

Ang ila opisyo parehas man sang tawo

Different literary devices are used in the ballad. For example, personification is used in stanza II, line 2 when the informant writes “Si Kasag ang gin preso, nga gin away ni alimango”. This gives the “Kasag” and “Alimango” human characteristics.

The informant also creatively used symbols in his ballad. For example, the “kasag” symbolizes a fisherman's livelihood, while the “alimango” symbolizes the danger that he faces every time he goes out to sea.

II

*Desdi namatay si umang, tenyente mayor si kagang
Si kasag ang gin preso, nga gin away ni alimango
Malasugi ang gwardyamante, Sa suba sang San Jose
Kag didto nausisaan, si parangan naalangan*

Another literary device used is the anaphora of the word “Si” in Stanza from IV-VII, which is the repetition of the word among the stanzas. The informant used anaphora to emphasize the importance of the story by repeating the word at the beginning of each line. This repetition creates a sense of urgency and importance and draws the readers' attention to the story that is being told.

IV

*Si tabagak amo ang superior, kung manuba manami ang sabor
Si pawikan kag si salmonete indi magpaulihi
Si bansa kag si barakuda, sa Guimaras may opisina
Sigwil ang managgete kay gintuslok nya ang butete*

V

*Si gini ang ginakurugan sang nagapanakayan
Si ilab ang makatabang sa oras oras nga tanan
Si kampo ang sa lawayan sa surid sang sacristan
Si karaho ang hudiyo, kay ginluiban ni bisugo*

VI

*Si gurayon ang ila maninoy, si gurayan ang ila maninay
Bilong bilong ang ila ihado, ginbunyagan ni pader abo
Si pakol ang ila orchestra, ginmanduan ni balyena
Manug abot si lumba lumba kay maturneyo sya kay mamsa*

VII

*Si duyong ang ila referee, announcer si gisi
Pagi ang ila catcher, palad ang ila dasher
Si payak ang manugtumbol, Si liwit manugsalindron
Manugbahog si dubla dubla, Si balela ang gitarista*

The story is not often told, and it is important to remember the culture of the riverine community that is being described. The informant could have chosen to use a third-person point of view as effective in delivering the message.

The informant uses descriptive language to set the scene and create a picture in the reader's mind. The informant also used the narrative form to move the story along and the sensory details to create a vivid picture for the reader.

Metrical Devices

Many verses in the ballads consist of between thirteen and twenty syllables. The syllabic count is probably more appropriate in literate traditions in the mode of delivery recitation. The dictate of the rhythm of Isdaanon ballad is the music with which they are sung or chanted.

The number of syllables in every stanza may be changed to suit the music. In Isdaanon may be sung, depending on the number of singers. The stanzas are sung alternately, in the first stanza, followed by the second stanza, and so on.

Musical Devices

The musical devices in the ballad are how the words are used to create a musical effect.

The music of the ballad is simple and easy to follow. The melody is often repetitive, and the lyrics are simple and direct. The ballad is meant to be sung, not read. It is meant to be heard, not seen. It is a traditional form of verbal art that is typically composed simply and directly.

The informant used slant rhyme to create a discordant and harmonious beat musical effect.

Tone

The tone is the indicator of the mood of the informant. Isdaanon is a ballad sung by fishermen to express different roles along the riverine communities in a humorous manner. It is a song of the people and for the people. This ballad is a way for the fishermen to communicate and share their culture and traditions. The Isdaanon ballad is a part of the riverine community's identity and is a way for them to connect with their cultural heritage.

The Isdaanon is sung in an upbeat manner. The mood of the song increases in intensity as the story develops and creates a cheerful mood. The use of repetition throughout the song also creates a sense of rhythm and flow. The instruments used in the ballad include guitars. The guitars create a light and airy sound, while the drums add a sense of rhythm, and movement, and add a sense of depth and richness to the overall sound.

The aesthetics of satire in the ballad riverine community can be seen in the way the ballads are often critical of the people and events in the community. The ballads often make fun of the people in the community and their actions, and this can be seen as a form of satire.

The ballads can also be seen as a form of social commentary, as they often highlight the problems and issues in the riverine community. This can be seen as a form of satire, as the ballads are pointing out the flaws in the riverine community. The ballads can also be seen as a form of entertainment, as they often provide a way for the people in the community to laugh at the events and people in the riverine community. This can be seen as a form of satire, as the ballads are often poking fun at the riverine community (Worcester, 2013).

The Isdaanon ballad is considered satire. It is a type of satire that was popular in the riverine culture. It was a form of social commentary that was used to criticize the government or other figures in authority. It was often critical of the government's treatment of the poor and oppressed.

It was a way for the people to voice their dissatisfaction with the government. The ballads were often critical of the government's treatment of the poor and oppressed. A way for the people to voice their dissatisfaction with the government.

The line saying, "Pugita among putente, Bagis fish ang Presidente"; is criticizing the government by using the president as an example of someone who is not doing their job. The ballad is saying that the president is like a fish out of water and is not doing his job correctly. This type of satire was popular in the riverine culture because it allowed people to voice their opinions about the government without fear of retribution.

*Pugita among putente, Bagis ang Presidente
Bagongon among Obispo, lukos ila maestro
Pasayan ila maestro, Hipon ila eskwela
Sapsap amoy pobre walay tambok maniawang pirmi*

One way the informant uses satire in the Isdaanon ballad is by making the referee a “dugong”, or “sea cow”. This is a clear reference to the fact that referees are often seen as being slow and sluggish, not paying attention to the game. Another way the informant uses satire is by making the announcer a “gisaw” fish. This is a clear reference to the fact that announcers are often seen as being annoying and interrupting the game.

The informant uses satire to highlight the various flaws in the sporting world. The players are all different animals, which is a clear reference to the fact that athletes are often seen as animals because of their competitiveness and physicality.

*Si dugong ang ila referee, announcer si gisaw
Pagi ang ila catcher, palad ang ila dasher
Si payak ang manugtumbol, Si liwit manugsalindron
Manugbahog si dubla dubla, Si balela ang gitarista*

Structure

The Isdaanon uses a system of organization that relies heavily on logical and psychological sequences. The movement of the plot started with the role of the community and making sure that everyone is accounted for. The community itself is organized into a number of smaller groups, each with its specific roles and responsibilities.

The rule of the ballad takes place on the characters. This is evident in the way that the ballad is structured. For example, the first stanza introduces the introduction of the narration. The second stanza introduces the conflict between the characters. The next stanzas introduce the name of the fish represents the role of people in society. This logical and psychological sequence is repeated throughout the ballad, making it easy for the reader to follow.

Based on stanza II, the informant presents a conflict in the community. It represents a world in a different way which allows making decisions that are based on reason and not emotion. The community is not afraid to make changes to society, and always looking for ways to improve it.

II

*Desdi namatay si umang, tenyente mayor si kagang
Si kasag ang gin preso, nga gin away ni alimango
Malasugi ang gwardyamante, Sa suba sang San Jose
Kag didto nausisaan, si parangan naalangan*

Stanza III from Isdaanon ballad, the society represents a meritocracy, which means that people are given positions based on their ability to perform the tasks required of them. There are different levels of ability, and each level is given a different amount of responsibility. The highest level is the most responsible, and the lowest level is the least responsible.

III

The Isdaanon ballad also uses repetition to create a sense of rhythm and unity in the ballad. This is seen in the way that certain words and phrases are repeated throughout the stanzas. This repetition creates a sense of unity and coherence in the ballad.

The lyrics of the ballad is based on the approach of politics among social classes. In Line 4 “Sapsap amoy pobre walay tambok maniwang pirmi”, the lyrics state that the rich are getting richer while the poor are getting poorer. The first line “Pugita among putente, Bagis ang Presidente”, it is also state that the government is not doing anything to help the poor. The lyrics express the frustration of the poor and their lack of options. In 3rd line, “Pasayan ila maestro, Hipon ila eskwela”, the lyrics also express through education which is the hope of all the things that will change and that the poor will one day be able to rise and take what is rightfully theirs.

*Pugita among putente, Bagis ang Presidente
Bagongon among Obispo, lukos ila maestro
Pasayan ila maestro, Hipon ila eskwela
Sapsap amoy pobre walay tambok maniwang pirmi*

In the 4th stanza, “Si tabagak amo ang superior, kung manuba manami ang sabor”, the lyrics revealed that the views have been influenced by the personal experiences of a working-class ‘superior’. The superiority witnessed firsthand influence the workers to be amazed by his work. The lyrics also describe the experience of working in the field and how others appreciated his work.

Filipino Worldviews reflected in the Ballad

The literary approach to politics is based on the Marxist theory of class struggle. He believes that the ruling class (the bourgeoisie) exploits the working class (the proletariat). The role of society differs from the capacity of the different types of fish. The big fish are the ones who are able to navigate the vast ocean and are able to find the best food and shelter. They are also the ones who are able to mate and produce the most offspring. On the other hand, small fish are not as capable as big fish and are often preyed upon.

This hierarchy is reflected in the Isdaanon ballad, where the big fish are described as being powerful and respected, while the small fish are seen as being insignificant. The ballad reflects the notion that the big fish are the most powerful and respected creatures in the sea, while the small fish are seen as insignificant. This is in line with the traditional view of the ocean as a place of mystery and danger, where the big fish are the ones that rule the waves. It is also worth noting that the ballad makes humans, which reflects the belief that humans are a part of the natural order of things of the ocean as used as the metaphorical word for community.

The ballad also reflects the idea that the ocean is a place of great beauty, and that those who are lucky enough to see it are truly fortunate. This is in line with the traditional view of the ocean as a place of great natural beauty and wonder.

It is also worth noting that the ballad reflects the idea that the ocean is a place of great danger just like society, and that those who are unlucky enough to find themselves in it are at great risk of being eaten by the big fish. This is in line with the traditional view of the ocean as a place of great danger and mystery, where the big fish are the ones that rule the waves.

Overall, the ballad reflects the traditional view of the ocean as a place of great beauty, danger, and mystery, where the big fish are the ones that rule the waves. It is a view that is still held by many people today in the riverine community.

(13) Conclusions and Recommendations (This part shall be written in narrative form and arranged based on the objectives and findings. Conclusions are general statements answering the objectives. Recommendations are based on the conclusions. They may be split or combined based on their length, which means, conclusions and recommendations may be split under separate headings if they are long. The riverine community, particularly the riverfolks have the very rich verbal arts, such as the ballad. They compose these verbal arts from their memory which they learn from the past generations. The ballad as a form of fisherfolks' verbal arts is a vehicle to communicate and share their experiences, beliefs, and values which are unveiled through its aesthetics. Moreover, the ballad reflects the worldviews fisherfolks in the riverine community whereby their aspirations, philosophies and idealisms are reflect implicitly. Hence, these verbal arts shall be passed on to the next generations for it tells about their story and thir identity. The education sector shall intensively document these verbal arts as vehicle of educating the young minds about the rich tradition not only in theriverine communities but also as Capiznon in general.
