II. RATIONALE:

Fisherfolks, farmers, children, and individuals residing in rural areas remained the poorest sectors in terms of poverty incidence in 2021. These sectors had the highest proportion of individuals belonging to families with income below the official poverty thresholds compared to the other basic sectors (PSA, 2023). The occurrence of poverty may be influenced by a number of circumstances, including bad weather and red tide.

Red tide had a severe impact on the marine waters of Capiz, particularly on the fishermen and shellfish producers that depend on the local seas for their living and food. Bad weather also affects their lives, particularly for small fishermen who are unable to go fishing. Fisherfolks who don't have a alternative source of income will suffer greatly.

Bridging an extension program on alternative livelihood, our fishermen would be able to continue their livelihood despite these adverse conditions. Additionally, it is believed that holding seminars on the advantages of close season and mangrove rehabilitation is essential to preventing opposition to the endeavor.

III. OBJECTIVES:

1. Conduct extension recipients' profiling
2. Conduct training needs assessment of the target recipients.
3. Conduct awareness activities concerning fisheries.
4. Conduct livelihood training on the selected fisherfolks
5. Evaluate the effectiveness of the training conducted.

6. Conduct lecture/orientation regarding red tide, close season, mangrove rehabilitation/reforestation and entrepreneurship,

IV. METHODOLOGY:
